Reading Matter on every page. Traveling Facilities-The Changes of 30 Years In glancing over the Congressional debates of 824, we were in no small degree amused by a liscussion upon the propriety of an adjournment. The obstacle to the immediate dissolution of Congress was the absence of the Sergeant-at-Arms, who had been dispatched to Illinois after Ex-Senator Edwards, as a witness in a case involving the character of Hon.W. H. Crawford, then Secretary of the Treasury. The Sergeant had left Washngton on the 23d of April, and reached Louisville on the 4th of May. From this city, according to the remarks of one of the members, he was to journey to Edwardsville, Ill., which would occupy him until the 10th of the month. Said Mr. Wickliffe, in his speech: By the 17th he may have arrived in Louisville By the 17th he may have arrived in Louisville in his return; it will take eight or ten days to get thence to Wheeling, and three or four days thence to this place, (Washingten,) supposing no interruption on the journey to occur, and when it is recollected that there was no regular chain of steamboat navigation, and that travelers have sematices to wait several days for a passage could sometimes to wait several days for a passage, could it be in the contemplation of any gentleman to wait here until the messenger returned—say till the 15th of June

Tempora mutantur. This journey, which occuied a government official seven weeks, thirty-four rears ago, can now be easily accomplished in five days. Not only has there been so vast a reduction in time, but a still greater and more marked in the discomforts and annoyances of the trip .-Then the traveler was obliged to resort to the lumbering stage-coach, and rough and tumble it over mountains and unimproved roads. A portion of the time was spent wheezing and puffing in a dingy steamer on the Ohio, and the remainder on horseback, jaunting through the pathless woods. Now, how widely different the case. Mountains have been levelled, rivers spanned, and the lightning train speeds across plain and hill, where formerly the heavy wagon or the solitary horseman journeyed, with snail-like leisure. These are the triumphs of our race and our age, worthy of everlasting remembrance. These are the strides in our material progress that have advanced us to the topmost pinnacle in national greatness. At this day, enjoying the unbounded and marvelous facilities that we do, for intercom munication between the different sections of the public, it is scarcely possible for us to realize he vastness of the changes wrought by the lapse of a few years. Yet there are hundreds and thousands in our midst who well remember the condition of almost total isolation in which the west once existed. They can call to mind the tedious journeyings north and south-the restrictions apon trade and commerce, and the consequent epression of every description of agricultural and anufacturing interest. Fortunately the inventive skill and the untiring nergy of the Anglo-Saxon race, operating under the benign influences of Providence, have wrought out for us an almost miraculous change. So that the stories of delays and privations, recorded of our people a quarter of a century since, seem ike the effusions of a wandering brain; and we an, with difficulty, realize the truth of a page of ongressional history such as we have cited

The absurdities and fallacies of any scheme of salvaion through the agency of moral intellect are forcibly presented. We have our doubts bout the utility of such works, and think that eligion must be poorly off for advocates and for ans of defense when it has to resort to such estionable instrumentalities. Editors Louisville Courier: "Hard times" are ing at present forgotten in the unusual exciteent attendant upon the forthcoming elections A trial of strength between the Democracy of Nebraska and their parti-colored opponents is about to take place. Need I say that the old and tried Democracy-the Spartan band, that has defended not one but many Thermopylæ-will do their duty, and, for the ten thousandth time, come out of battle crowned with the laurels of victory. Our opponents, composed of the odds and ends o all parties, are collecting their scattered ranks, preparatory to an overwhelming charge from the United Democracy. I shall, in my next, give you United Democracy. I shall, in my next, give you an account of the action, with the respective leaders of the unterrified and their enemies. The engagement comes off on Monday next, August 2. The rain has ceased for the time being, and we are now enjoying delightful weather. The crops have not suffered as much as had been anticipated, and hopes are entertained that they will average those of the preceding years.

Gen. Calhoun, the surveyor general of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, has been superseded—by whom is not yet known. Gen. Ward Burnett, and Mr. Martin, chief clerk in the office of the surveyor general, are spoken of as his successors. Much regret is felt amongst Gen. Calhoun's friends at his removal, as he had made himself exceedingly popular with all who came in contact, or transacted any business, with him. Before his removal, he had contracted for the surefore his removal, he had contracted for the sur-ey of large tracts of land in this Territory, and he deputy surveyors are now busily engaged in laking preparations for a comprehensive the deputy surveyors are now busily engaged in making preparations for a campaign on the prairies of the "far west."

Considerable interest has been felt as to the issue of an anticipated collision which was expected to take place between confederate bands of the Omaha, Punca, and Pawnee tribes with the Sioux. The Sioux tribe, who are the deadly enemies of the confederates, were reported to be hunting on the Loup Fork of Platte river, about eighty miles northwest of Omaha. On this report reaching the confederates, they started for the Sioux hunting grounds, in three columns, and in different the confederates, they started for the Sibux hund-ing grounds, in three columns, and in different directions, with the intention of surroudding the Sioux. Col. Haden, aid-de-camp of Gov. Richard-son, returned this morning from the Loup Fork, and reports all quiet, and says that no collision will probably take place, as the Sioux were on the alert, and will not, with their inferior numbers, hazard an engagement. Au revoir alert, and will not, with the hazard an engagement. Au revoir, "VOYAGEUR."

A man named Samuel Hill, but better known about town as "Sam Patch," a gambler, committed suicide yesterday afternoon at the residence of his brother in-law, Robert Baker, on Barr street, by shooting himself in the mouth with a pistol this class.

227 A man, near New Orleans, has taken up the trade of killing alligators. Commencing in May last, he has killed over four hundred of these varmints. He hunts at night, carrying a pan of the purpose, as was supposed, of going to sleep. Soon after, his wife heard the snap of a pistol, and rushed into the room, and as she entered, a second explosion followed, and she discovered her husband lying before her upon the floor. Dr. Thornion was immediately sent for, but they followed.

Progress of the Fever—Mortality Among the Young —Frightened Immigrants—Shocking Scenes at a Cemetery—Heavy Rains, etc. Our dispatches, published daily, keep the pubic advised of the progress of the vellow fever in New Orleans. The agent of the Southern Aid ociety in that city, writes:

The yellow fever commenced its ravages here about the middle of June, first among the sailors, but has since been gradually spreading through the city. In a postscript he says: The agent of death is in our midst; the pestilence is increasing; our hospitals are fast filling up. Pray for us. He relates the following incident: "I called to see a German family in a back yard, found the mother and four children sick with yellow fever and lying upon beds of shavings. Two little girls of the same family administered to their necessities. provided watches for the night, and next morning sent them to the Charity hospital. The father had previously died—the mother and two children are ace dead, while the other two little girls ar there with the same disease."

The New Orleans Crescent says: The New Orleans Crescent says:

The fever, we observe, is unusually severe on young people. Every other funeral we see down town the coffin and crape are white. Passing a knot of women, yesterday, we heard one say: "It's awful bad among the young folks—I knew a splendid girl that died yesterday, only sixteen years old."

The different benevolent societies are making every preparation to attend to the fover, if it gets within their ranks. One of them, the Spanish Benevolent Society, has lost several members by

They kept on singing after the ship was made fast. A police officer, going on board, stepped up to them, and said to them, in their own language, "Gentlemen, don't ng so loud; there are a great many sick peopl about here, for the yellow fever is very bad."—
This was the first the immigrants knew of the fever being in the city, and they at once stopped singing—incontinently wilted—with feelings which may be better imagined than described. Among the passengers were eleven Cotholic priests and four may who expressed to the control of the con ir nuns, who expressed not a little alarm, say ing that as they had come over by invitation of the archbishop, they felt it would be his duty to send them back, or to some other place of salety, as soon as possible. At last it was shoved in, and the spade of one of the negroes held it until the other threw large quantities of hard mud, which served as a weight to keep the head down. Suspected Felon.—One James McDonald, an awful hard-looking case, face pock marked, and his head all battered and banged up, was in arrest and presented as a suspected felon. A witness, resident on Main street, below Tenth, testified that accused invaded his house at a very late hour of the night, and he thought he had broken in to steal. He was found up stairs having first taken the precaution to slip oil his shoes, leaving them at the foot of the stairs. He, in defense, said he was drunk, had been drunk ever since he was paid off, and thought he was in his boarding house. Bail of $200 was required for his good behavior 4 months.

This all occurred in the house of one Kate Bord, a notorious woman, where he had accused her of talking about him. The case was here continued till to-morrow.

Shooting at Boys for Piegons.—Jas. R. Rogers, an old, grey-headed man, was presented on the charge of shooting at a gang of boys with a double barrelled pistol. One of the boys showed his hat, which was terribly wounded and tore all to pieces from the effects of the shot, or rough

Another boy testified to about the same, only adding that the boy's hat had been shot at before. It had been set up as a mark, or target, and no doubt most of the marks were made in it then, as it is barely possible that the hat on the boy's head could be shot through and through and not one touch or mark the skin. It appears that a gang of very bad boys were continually in the lot of accused, committing all sorts of depredations, stealing his pears, and annoying him in divers ways, and he shot over the heads of this crowd sceaning his pears, and annoying him in divers ways, and he shot over the heads of this crowd to scare them away. The boys of this city are perfectly lawless and uncontrolled, and the old man did just right in driving them off, but should not have fired lower. The Court, however, decided that he had violated the law, and bail of $200 was required to answer a misdemeanor.

Our city was visited yesterday evening with a heavy and driving rain storm, accompanied with lightning and thunder, and high wind, which for a few minutes had the force of a hurricane. The rain came down in torrents, and for a short time fell as hard as we have ever seen in this climate The wind did considerable damage.

The entire front on Jefferson, of Miller, Wingate & Co.'s new agricultural building, on the north-west corner of Jefferson and Ninth streets. was blown down with a terrible crash. The building was hardly finished, and no other damage was done than the blowing down of the front. No one was in it, we believe, at the time, and fortunately no one was injured by the falling wall, though a man went by it but a few seconds before the grand smash. The building was two and half stories high, and unoccupied.

The hurricane was felt with greater force on the river and levee than anywhere else. The steamers Duke, Tempest and Eolean, all that were at the wharf, were torn from their moorings, and for a while threatened with apparent destruction One of the boats had her fantail smashed by the wind driving her against another boat. Excepting this, no damage was done. The wind caught the ferry boat and sent it up the river at an uncomfortable rate of speed, and faster than it ever before trav

The heavy metal roof on the warehouse of W A. Richardson, Bullitt street, was raised up, but the lull of the wind allowed it to settle again. A ouse on the levee was unroofed, and others in arious parts of the city slightly damaged. THE PACING MATCH OVER OAKLAND .- The pacer hightning and Thunder, the former to wagon and the latter to harness, pace the match pace this evening over Oakland Course. THE ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH CABLE.—We had the QUININE SUBSTITUTE: Rev. J. M. Pendleton, a distinguished Baptist pleasure yesterday of seeing a genuine specimen of the Atlantic telegraph cable. It was shown us by our friend, P. M. Jones, Esq., of Fourth street, who has just returned from New York. Mr. Jones visited the Niagara immediately upon her arrival in the harbor, and procured this piece of the cable from on board the vessel, paying one of the men five dollars for the specimen. But the cost is nothing compared to its value as a memento of the most wonderful achievement of the age. As such it is worthy of preservation, and should be carefully treasured up. It is a simple, plain blackened cord-tarred and rough, and af fords evidence not only of having been submerged, but of the great strain to which it was subjected. In this connection it may be well to remark that the Messrs. Tiffany, of New York, did not procure the remainder of the cable on the Niagara as reported. The telegraphic dispatches to the press throughout the country to that effect were alse, and doubtless promulgated as a puff for the ewelry establishment of the Messrs. Tiffany. The elegraphic reporter who forwarded the dispatch merits not only a reprimand, but dismission from the service.

THEATER.-The Martinetti and Blondin Troupe lose their engagement to-night. They offer an excellent bill, consisting of "Pongo, the Intelli gent Monkey," classic posturing by the brothers Martinetti, and the "Brigands, or the Midnight Attack." THE LAYING OF THE TELEGRAPH WIRES.

THE LAYING OF THE TELEGRAPH WIRES.

THE stream of Time down the thoroughfare of Life, whose restless waters bear from our midst myriads of our race, and annually presents a succession of scenes of a variety of casts, proving thereby that changes are interwoven in the nature of things, and is an integral part of man's composition—this being true, while the philosophy of mind is progressive in its construction, therefore onward in its tendency, each revolving year brings to light the various improvements invented by man, which enables us, in this the nineteenth century, to stand on the coast of the Emerald Isle and hold sweet converse in Freedom's land. In this we see the comprehensive powers of mind made manifest, both in a philosophical and mechanical point of view, grasping in its wide range the sundry departments that each is to fill in contributing his mite to the age in which he lives. We readily confess our allotment of avocation in life in this great drama, if such we may call it, is comprehensive in the extreme, as a neat covering for the mind or the receptacle thereof, above all other wearing apparel, is calculated to arouse from deep embryo the latent energies of our nature, and even bring to our midst the sweet music of song—

int it uniform in quality. Its Diaphoretic and Alterative properties, combined with its great Tonic qualities, render it emb uinine, and other remedies, as a general and popular remedy in all cases where a Tonic is requi

Quinine, and other remedies, as a general and popular remedy in all cases where a Tonic is required and proper to be administered.

It does not produce Headache, Giddiness, Buzzing of the Ears, or any of the unpleasant effects which so frequently attend the use of Quinine, or other remedies, but may be given in all cases, and under all circumstances whatever, to Females, Infants, and all persons who are debilitated, or have the most delicate constitutions, without the least apprehension of any injurious or even unpleasant effects.

Practitioners of medicine who have not prescribed it, and afflicted persons who have not used it, are respectfully invited to give it but a fair trial, and they will then be convinced of its great superiority over other remedies and that it possesses all the virtues claimed for it.

It is not only perfectly safe and innocent in its effect, but in no case whatever has it been known to fail in curing Chills and Fever, or Ague and Fever, whether of short or long standing, if the directions were strictly followed and carried out.

Chills and Fever, or Ague and Fever, whether of short or long standing, if the directions were strictly followed and carried out.

This medicine has become a staple remedy, and for years has been extensively used throughout the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Ohlo, Indiana, Nebraska, Pennasylvania, Michigan, and California, and more lately in Kansas Territory, and has permanently cured near 2,000,000 of cases in all its varied forms and conditions, many of which were from one to three years' standina, and had resisted all the usual remedies known in the country, and in no case did it fail to make a perfect and permanent cure where the directions were properly followed. Such is its invariable success that it has gained the confidence, favor, and patronage of a large number of respectable practitioners of medicine throughout the country, who prescribe and administer it in preference to Quinine and other remedies.

Persons living in districts of country subject to Chills and Fever, Ague and Fever, or Billious Fever, would do well to keep a constant supply of this invaluable remedy always on hand.

The proprietor has in his possession a large number of certificates and other testimonials from persons who have used this medicine, as well as from Physicians, Druggists, Apothecaries, and other dealers in medicine, attesting its superior virtues as a curative in Chills and Fever, or Ague and Fever; and he could obtain many thousands more, or enough to fill a large volume, but does not deem it necessary, as it is already extensively and favorably known to the public generally.

The entire catalogue embraced 234 lots. It would be a difficult matter to name any article necessary comfort—from a camp bedstead to a punchowl-which was not included in the list. The personal wardrobe was extensive — comprising wenty-four pairs of pants, a whole heap of vests, umerous coats and no less than four dre owns. Gambling in St. Louis. The St. Louis Republican says: It is generally dmitted that at no time in the history of this city has gambling of all sorts been carried on to such an extent as within a few months past, and at present. Besides "faro banks," monte tables and the resorts for the various other games with cards situated in the very heart of the city, there are of daylight, where swindling devices in the way of lotteries are paraded to allure the inexperienced and unwary. Usually these lotteries, or gift enand unwary. Usually these lotteries, or gift en-terprises, as they are politely termed, are coupled with the sale of some toothache or headache med ine; some infallible remedy for corns or other ney expended," independent of the chance of drawing prizes. Of course they are humbugs and traps; but from the prodigality of dress and ewelry worn by the proprietors of these estab-lishments, it is apparent that they pay handsome-ly and afford means for all manner of excesses. Napoleon has just made a present of five thousand francs to a private in the line, who asserts that he has discovered the solution for the great problem in zeronautics—the art of flying. He has in rented a kind of air ship, consisting of a plat-orm of silk, stretched over whalebone, to be pro-belled by two gigantic wings of the same material laced on each side. The ærial navigator is to be spended at a distance of a about four feet from e platform while his feet rest on pedals, by means which the wings are to be set in motion, while or which the wings are to be set in motion, while his arms rest on a lever which imparts to the plat form the direction he chooses to give it. Only a model of this machine has yet been constructed and it appears to work well.

The lopement upon a superior scale took place on Wednesday, from that prolific field of love that don't run smooth, in consequence of cruel "payrints," Kentucky. The parties are from Falmouth; the gentleman's name is E. D. Lightfoot, and the lady's Sarah M. Shawhan. She is said to be helpess to the sping little sum of parties arrived at the Spencer House too late to pro church. The lucky bridegroom, after the cere-mony, started upon a honey tour with his beauti-ful and wealthy bride.—Cincinnati Commercial.

THE LUNATIC.

A STORY OF THE SOUTH. CHAPTER VII.

At ten o'clock the following morning, my client called to say that my presence was alone required to commence the hearing of the case. I forthwith proceeded to accompany him to the court room. The hearing of the application for release under the writ was before our circuit court judge, a grave, patient man, of a warm, generous heart, and a clear, logical head.

We entered; the judge was in his seat, and a few bystanders had collected. I announced that we were ready to hear and defend. The judge ordered the sheriff to bring in the applicant for discharge from confine-A pause of a few moments, and the young attorney who appeared for the writ, announced, in a frightened voice, the party present and ready.

Meanwhile, I had more than once thought I heard sounds of old, familiar voices, but, seeing no one, supposed it some fancied similarity of voice of some one present, and the next moment it was forgotten, as I examined the papers to see that everything was regular, and as it should be, under the law. Satisfied, I arose and walked to where the lunatic was. He sat with his head bowed down on his hands, and continued so for some time. I was in the act of walking away, when a wooly pate was thrust up from behind the bar, and a voice I never could forget, cried: "De Lord come down! Oh, oh, o-o-oh! mars'r Emmet! mars'r Emmet!"

It was Charles. The poor fellow could say no more, but alike regardless of the place and the occasion, he rolled over the bar that separated us, and laughing and crying by turns, lifted me in his arms, with tears streaming down his polished cheeks, and crying out, "Oh, mars'r Ben! mars'r Ben!" as he went, bore me in triumph outside of the bar and into the "witness box," where sat the lunatic, Benedick Hampton!

"Great God!" I involuntarily exclaimed, "can this be possible, that this is my dear old friend of other days?"

At the sound of my voice, he started, then looked up at me with a sad, vacant stare that smote me to the heart. Had the lamp of the soul gone out, and godlike reason left to grope in darkness forever? A painful consciousness that my fears were, alas! too true, shocked and unmanned me. Charles, with the instinctive shrewdness of his race, perceived at once the impression his master's apathy had made on me, and half crazed himself by the idea that I, too, should regard his master as a lunatic, utterly regardless of the sheriff's threats to expe him from the room, protested, vehemently, that his master was as sound of mind as his DAILY COURIER judge, firmly. Nothing loth, the sheriff like a vice.

"I fine you, for contempt of court, one hundred dollars, sir, and if you disturb the court again, I shall send you to jail; and, sir, if the fine is not paid at once, I shall order the

"In the name of reason, Mr. Lawler, will you inform the court (as you seem a party to it) what all this uproar is about, sir?— 'Pon my word, twenty years on the bench, and I never saw such a scene in court before,

I was near my crazed friend. Before I could answer the judge's question, he rose trem-blingly to his feet, and with tears streaming down his poor wo-worn face, held out his arms to me, the most hope-abandoned astonishingly unctious and earnest. "There, object that ever touched my heart by its Charles, that'll do now; your master's sick, silent pathos and eloquence.

His despairing heart was too full for words. He flung his arms around my neck, and while convulsive throbs shook his frame, the strong man wept! His pride-humbled heart found relief in tears in the hour of the soul's extremest trials, and he was saved! "I am not crazed! oh God! I am not my neck, and pressed me eagerly to his glad!" "Heaven has sent you, my friend, to strike down the fiend that had nearly thrust me over the outmost verge and fathom of reason's limits into the horrible night be yond, and to save me! I am saved; thank God, I am not crazed! I am not crazed!' And now he held me a little way from him, and I saw a new light in the window of his soul. My distressful fears and doubts were gone, and I felt heartful relief that my generous friend had, in truth, escaped man's ost fearful fall and hope-disolving wreck.-

I led Hampton aside into the jury room recess, that in his intensely excited and nervously deranged condition, he might not b exposed to the rude stare of the crowd which had now collected in the hall, and pressed even inside the bar.

As I returned to the room, my client broke from the sheriff and rushed up to my side .-His eyes were absolutely blood shot—and foaming at the mouth, he grated his teeth and thumped his ponderous jaws with heavy champ against each other. Almost throttled by his ungovernable passion, he shook his huge fists at me and hoarsely roared:

"How dare, how dare you, sir, palaver with that d—d scoundrel? Treason! treason! sure as h-ll!"

"I refuse to defend for you, sir. I regard the whole proceeding, from the beginning, as iniquitous and illegal, and shall promptly lend my aid to prosecute you to the fullest extent and rigor of the law for the hand you have had in this transaction. Suspecting that foul play had been used in this matter or wrong was to be done, I refused to commit myself to you as your attorney under all circumstances, and not to act for you at all, if I found my suspicions verified. I came to watch you, sir: if I found you honest and sincere, to aid; if otherwise, to thwart you. I have kept my word to you and my promis to myself." Turning to the court I informed t that we made no defense, and in answe to the court's inquiries, I stated that I had known Mr. Hampton, (confined under the assumed name of Archibald Smith, as alunatic) for many years; and aside from certain eccentricities, knew him for as sound-headed and gallant-hearted a gentleman as the world afforded; and prayed the court that he might no longer be outraged by this illegal and unheard of proceeding, and that he be forthwith discharged, pledging myself, individually for the truth of my statement; and that h remain within the jurisdiction and subject t

theorder of the court. "Upon whose application has this perso been brought before me?" asked the judge
"On mine, sir," said the young attorney who had appeared in the court as Hampton's

"Will Mr. Briefless inform the court of the facts before him in relation to this matter, and if he has proof for the court's notice?' beckoned me to him, and in a hurried and disjointed undertone, stated to me the substance of what he knew, and asked advice I told him to answer the court with the truth, and as briefly as possible, which he very reluctantly proceeded to do. "I-I-please-if the honor-your court, will-will please-yes-sir; this, your sir, sir, is this: this black man, sir-this, that the sheriff's put out of court—came to my of-fice, sir, and said, sir, and said, please the court, that his master was, sir, confined in the asylum, and wanted me to get him out some way, and was at me so often, sir, that I went with him at last, and saw the gentleman, Mr. Smith, or Mr. Hampton, which is his real name, sir, as he and Mr. Lawler says, sir; and he was, as far as I could see, straight enough, sir, and distressed and broken spirited like. Please the court. I think he would have soon gone crazy, though, if he hadn't been brought out; so, sir, I found the black man's statements to be true; and the negro begged and prayed so, sir, that I thought he would be crazy soon, and then I made this application, and had process issued, bringing Mr. S——s—Mr. Hamp—Hampton, sir before your honor. And here, sir, please the' court, are Doctor Bolus and Doctor Pillgreen who've examined him, and will say he's all right sir; and they are the witnesses and the proof, when they're examined. That is about the whole statement, and I hope, please the court, that my client may be discharged, and restored to his natural, rightful liberty, sir.' "Bravo! Briefless; very cleverly said, and a good action well done," I said, as he took his seat, very red, and perspiring freely.

Good Dr. Bolus, and slender Pillgreen, sustained Briefless' statement in every particular; and gave it, as their medical opinion, that the atmosphere of a mad house is unwholesome for persons of sane mind, and particularly injurious to any one who had undergone intense mental and nervous excitement, or who was laboring under temporary derangement of the nerves, or unusual disturbance of the passions; and united in recommending that the applicant be discharged to liberty and his friends.

The court asked if the defense opposed the motion to release. I rose and stated that I had been conditionally retained by one Mr. Samuel Blake for the defense to the motion; that since the case was called, I was convinced that the incarceration of Mr. Hampton had been procured by this person through false and fraudulent means, and that Mr. Hampton was shamefully and unjustly detained, contrary to the purview and intent of the law, and in violation of natural justice; and for that reason I had further refused to act for the defense in the premises. Furthermore, I again asked the court that the unfortunate gentleman be released, as he was very ill, and needed rest and immediate medical attendance. The court told Blake as he appeared there only as guardian or chairman of the committee of lunacy, it was not necessary for him to which he indulged. "Whoop! dah now, dat's it; Oh! I melogeously praise the Lord. O-o-o, mars'r Ben?' cried the delighted creature in an ecstacy at the success of his efforts for his master's liberation. We could not do otherwise than stop until Charles's first paroxysm had some-what subsided; for he lifted both Hampton and myself, alternately, in his stalwart arms, as though we had been children, and embraced us with a strength as impressive as it was and the quicker we get him to a place of rest, the better," I said to him.

"I 'clar on high, mars'r Lawler, I feels de goodness runnin' inter me, an' swellin' e'enamost ter bustin' de perpendicular complercations ob de corporiousness ob de circulatin' tabernacle of dis poor heart; an' oh, Lord! it's like honey low down de mouf, an' better crazed!" he cried with all the tenderness of dan de banjo clip ter de rosin heel nigger, o' agonized entreaty, while he clung close about | Chrismus! > "A very excellent feeling, Charley, I have no doubt, but a carriage would be of more service to your master, just now. Can't you contrive to have one at the door in just one inute?" said I.

> "Yes sah, I gits two in a minute; I dun got one now. Dah's dem now, standin' perspicuously right ober dar in front, sah." Sure enough, a carriage was at the door; we descended the steps, Charles flung open the door, assisted us in, shut it with a loud bang, and leaping upon the seat beside the driver seized the reins, and before that astonished functionary had time to recover from his coup de main, we were flying down street in the opposite direction to my hotel. I had neglected to give Charles directions, and without waiting for them, he drove rapidly off, apparently highly delighted with the idea of moving away, no matter where. I charged our excited jehu with the necessary nstructions while he dexterously turned the establishment about, and in a few moments more I had my exhausted friend in my own

> While coming along I could not help re marking' that there seemed a sharp dispute between Charles and the attachee of the carriage. On questioning Charles, he evaded me, and did not seem to be communicative. I afterwards learned that Charles had taken his honor the judge's equipage, by storm, as t stood at its accustomed place waiting for the adjournment of court to convey him to his home, and had actually pressed it into service, contrary to the will of the rightful charioteer: and it was the contest for the reins between Charles and him that I heard as we drove to the hotel.

> > CHAPTER VIII.

Now that we were alone, I had time to nark the frightful change in the appearance of Hampton. I could hardly believe my own eyes, so fearful had been the ravages two hort years had committed on the good looks of my handsome young friend. His frank eliant countenance was pale and haggard and his eyes glared with a restless brilliancy hat betokened a too active brain, which, pressed too far, must end in proud reason's ternal abasement and the soul's fell despair He looked a half score years older than when I last saw him.

I perceived at once that he was really very ll, and pursuaded him to lie down, while I ispatched Charles for Doctor Bolus. It was well I did so; for by the time the good man could reach the hotel, my fever-stricker friend was breathing quick and laboriously— tossing, raving, and dozing alternately, in the leathly grasp of that dreadful disease, brain

The patient physician taxed his utmost skill, and bestowed the most unwearied attention upon his patient, but for many days death clutched the scale of chance, and held them balanced against him and life.

Warm hearts and ready hands stood around is bed, and through the weary hours of the night ministered to him with a brother's thoughful care, patiently listening to his soul's tempestuous utterings, and with pitying eye and hushed lips, saw his noble intellect straying in the meshes of disease, and gazed the grief-pictures of his wo-stricken heart, limned with the terrible splendor and vividness that man's immortal intellect puts forth when making its last glorious deathstruggle against the waves of that dark eter. nal sea of living death.

The novel circumstances of Hampton's case found its way into the newspapers, and formed the staple of much comment and gossip. Public sentiment—that powerful and whimsical something—became Hampton's wealth, and high connexion as his sword and buckler with which to drive the public, like a flock of sheep, before him; but, for once, the "dear creature" proved refractory to the seductive influences of gold, purple and fine linen, and persisted in having its own way, and in declaring him the veriest brute

Numbers called daily, while Hampton lay thus halting 'twixt life and death, who were entire strangers, to ask after his condition. and to offer their services.

The grave, thoughtful, but noble hearted

H-, came to watch around the sick bed of my friend, and to render what assistance he could. Young Briefless, and his friend Pillgreen, were unremitting in their attentions; but shall I not record it and shame the more pretending world with an instance of devotion as unobtrusive as it was noble and matchless?-not any of these friends, nor all; no, not even they or I together ad-ded, equalled the sleepless devotion of the poor slave who had followed his master's fortunes into such desperate straits, and now, while he hung on the very crumbling brink of life, I solemnly believe, would gladly have plunged over into the valley shadowed by death, to have saved his adored master that dread journey. Poor Charles hovered around his master's bed with sleepless vigil; subdued, and noiseless he moved about, and with ready tact was first to divine his wants and minister to them. At times, when the doctor came, he would watch his countenance; and at each shake of good old Bolus' head, as an unfavorable symptom met his eye, huge rills of scalding tears would course down his dusky cheek and bedew his ample chest. The poor fellow forsook his food, and his voice grew husky in his efforts to conceal his fears and his anxiety.

Hampton's strength rapidly sank. The doctors held a consultation, and after a care-and salvation.

Poor Charles lingered near while their con-

"Well, Charles, you can do so if you desire it," I answered, and he forthwith departed on court as well as his nervous agitation would permit, took my arm and I led him from the left the bedside of his patient, stole into the To begin: room. At the door we found Charles, and adjoining room, where I sat listless and worn I was not sure for a while that he ought not out by watching and anxiety, and in a low tone announced that his patient slept, and vagrant souls and diseased brains, by reason of the extravagant demonstrations of joy in slumbers to life, or speedily sink into the dreamed into what unlucky point adverse sleep that knows no waking.

Charles returned with the man of God, hulk. while his master still slept. The minister tarried while he offered up at the bedside of the sun betook himself, from gazing on a the dying man, in low, earnest tones, a fer-vent prayer before the throne of the Holy loom up against the western sky against the One for his recovery, and for his soul's repose. Charles lay prostrate on the floor and sobbed deeply, while now and then repeating the cher's words ending with fervent amen! and when the minister rose to his feet and least from the description, so I believed) had went his way, he still continued to echo, amen!

After many hours of deep, deathlike sleep, aring which nature had rallied all her strength for the last great struggle with death, Hampton awoke, completely prostrated, weak as an infant; but, thanks to his triumphed. Death had been driven from his victim-the crisis in his disease was past, and he was saved!

If Charles' joy at his master's release from the charge of lunacy was extravagant, language is too poor to express his jubilant reeings now. It were vain for me to attempt describe the thousand original modes by which he strove to manifest it. There was no quaint device known to his oriental imagination, that Charles did not put in practice, and I verily believe, in his abundant thankfulness and good nature, he would have even onsented to have forgiven client Blake for eing, as he conceived, the cause of all his master's troubles.

A few days after this, a message was rought me, while sitting in Hampton's room, that a lady wished to see me in the parlor of the hotel, as soon as I was at leisure

Thinking it a client, who, not finding me at my office, had sought me there, I repaired at once to the reception room. I there found lady in black, and thickly vailed. I bowed respectfully; she arose from her seat, and advanced towards me. Holding out her ungloved hand—white and very beautiful—to me, she said, inquiringly: "Mr. Lawler?"

"The same, madam," replied I, bowing. "Mr. Emmet Lawler, counseller at law, she pursued; "formerly of T---?" Yes, madam. My name is Emmet Law er, and I formerly lived at T---You have a friend lying mortally ill?"

"Yes, madam." "His name is Hampton-Benedick Hamp-"It is."

Then, in a voice tremulous with emotion, she asked: "Will he recover, sir?" "That, madam," I replied, "I would to heaven I could with certain affirmation answer. He is better, and we hope for the

"I pray God he may be restored, and you, sir, may heaven reward you for your kindness and consideration; and now, kind sir, will you do me the favor to present this letter to Mr. Hampton as soon as, in your judgment, it may be prudent for him to receive It explains itself; and may I ask, sir, that you will be kind enough to suspend an opinion of conduct that may now appear inxplicable-perhaps indelicate-until your riend has read and informed you of its contents. If he dies, then-oh God! how wicked is my life!—you must read the letter and forgive. She held out the letter to me; it was directed with remarkable boldness and elegance of chirography, and then again laying her small, pearly hand in mine, said in a low, sweet "You will remember this commission, Mr. Lawler? 'Most religiously madam," I replied .-

Your injunctions have become a solemn duty before me.' "Then, sir, good bye; may we meet again under pleasanter auspices." As she moved to the door, I offered to accompany her, but she waved me back with a master's skill! as sanguine hope an imperious motion of her hand, and departed as she came, alone. I returned to my sick friend's side, revolving in my mind this singular incident, and endeavoring to recall, if possible, some fragment of the past, in which this lady had acted a part in the little life-drama I had been destined to play, but could not. Memory moved restlessly back, and strove, among her shadowy train, to salute with a kiss of recognition the object of her search, but in vain. Her foot-prints in the sand were lost blotted past recall by the rippling waterlets of time. Ah, me! 'tis hard to think, when memory is so scant of care, and loosely keeps ner gems. Unsatisfied in my efforts at solv ing the mystery of this lady's singular visit, I endeavored to dismiss the affair from my mind altogether. I deposited the letter in my desk for safe keeping, and in a few days ad forgotten all about it. Hampton's recovery was slow and difficult for several weeks, then his amendment was more rapid, and soon he was able to walk about his room, to sit and watch the pale wintry sunlight for hours as it fell powerless on the frozen earth, and to listen, unwearied, for days, to Charles' eccentric gossip of the doings of the busy world around, As spring drew on he had so far recovered as to be out with me, on fine days, riding; and soon good old Bolus pronounced him cured, and beyond the danger of relapse. I had been cautioned by the doctor not to allude to the occurrences of the past, that had operated so unaccountably on Hampton, until he gave me leave to do so, and though his mind often wandered back to them, I had as often nanaged to make a successful diversion to less dangerous topics. Entirely occupied by the duties of my profession, I was compelled to forego the wished for detail of his adventures after leaving me at B---t, more than two years before, which Hampton had promised, as soon as I had time to listen. The let-liver; nor had I spoken of the singular visit (of which he was the object) I had received, to Hampton.

The wished for hour came. Hampton was now quite restored; he had, besides, recovered something of his old reckless gayety, and love of the ludicrous, though oftener and thoughtful-even sad. Summoning Bolus and bashful Briefless, we adjourned to the quiet of my little room, and Hampton told his story in nearly the words I have here ter I had been cautioned by Bolus not to de-written them: "You remember, ah, yes! you remember, when I left you at B-t in the summer of 184- and what a fool's errand you thought it?" fears said Hampton; and seeing my look of assent he continued: "The devil, doubtless, was at my elbow there—as he has been often since; to tempt, (and he is, ever beguiling ful examination of his case, came to the con- the hearts of us poor worms of the dust when clusion that he was beyond the utmost limit of their skill—that in the Omnipotent Will Eternal alone lay the sands of his life, cure and salvation.

I reached that interesting borough just as rolling Tuscaloosa. I was soon hand in glove' with my communicative landlady, and, to my inexpressible satisfaction, learned that the parties it suited my humor to pursue (at stopped there the night preceding the morning of the day of my arrival.

I would have started in pursuit without moment's delay, had it not been for Charles' earnest remonstrance. As it was, however on being informed the next morning of some further particulars by my landlady, making youth and vigorous constitution, nature had the identity of the strangers alluded to ab solutely certain to my mind, I ran the gauntlet of getting my head broken to comme with, for putting-in my elation at the intelligence-my arms about her neck, and giving the excellent creature a hearty hug, in spite of her vehement protestations, that the man is a lookin,' Oh, don't!' she exclaimed puckering up her jolly mouth, 'he's the jealouses ole pig that ever cum frum Nor' Karlina; (and I'm now inclined to the same opinion) Sure enough, the 'ole pig' was 'a lookin,' and presently came trotting up to where we were, and in a furious rage, swore he'd make 'sas sage meat' of me, (as if I'd been a dog).

"With great difficulty, he was partially ap peased, but still threatened, 'ef he caught me gourd vining around the neck of his ole gal agin, he'd be dad roasted, ef he didn't make me walk Spanish, sure as gospil-be derned to me!

"Fortunately for me, Charles heard the outcry, and came to the rescue. "'Ki, now; what for you gwine inter ystematic complexion, mars'r Jones? Cha!

"'Yer be durned, yer shamopooverin' nigger, don't you reckon I knows when a man's nuggin' my wife-his durned arums roun' her neck, an' stickin' kisses into her like blazes;

"Charles announced that our carriage waited, I slipped the night's fare into madame's hand, and left the 'ole pig' in possession of his wife's charms; and in the uninterrupted enjoyment of being jealous to his heart's content.

CHAPTER XI.

"O the weary round I drifted-yes, drifted! or no guide went before me; no pillar of cloud by day; no light by night; not even a foot-print in the dust of the world's highway, ed me on: I drifted, I drifted whithersoever the idle fantasies that floated through my brain impelled me. With a purpose hidden in my breast; hidden from the world, and only half revealed to myself, I pursued this marsh-light of the soul, unstable as the wind: as mocking as the mirage of the desert; this gossamer thread, leading nowhere, made of othing; this shadow of a passion; this ideal of love, lighter than the down of fairy's wing, as shadowy as dreams of haleyon hours that float in the limner light of the ebbing past; this love of an echo, echo of love, beckoning me on, had strength to drive me before it. as the reed before the blast; had the invisible power to fashion me into what manner of man it would; to usurp even fortune's place, and drive forward the car of destiny at its will.

"Though baffled constantly, my track doubling and crossing upon itself I followed with a diligence and devotion worthy at least Now close upon the consummation of the dearest wish of my heart, to be permitted to know, to woo, to win the hand that had swept over the barp of my soul with then at fault, utterly lost in a wilderness of doubts, and almost despairing. But my comfort is—and that's something—I clung to my purpose with a tenacity nothing could put aside—nothing shake.

"Trancendentalism, isn't it, doctor? If I ore you, say so. To Lawler and Briefless I've no apologies, they must stand it." "Good, my friend; go on in your own way. My interest in your welfare keeps pace with your story, tell it as you will," answered the doctor, kindly.

"Thank you, doctor, for your sympathy," said Hampton earnestly. Then after a mo-

"Charles remonstrated with me often, and strove by every respectful means in his power to induce me to abandon my wayward wanlerings and return home, and I am not sure but that he thought me crazy, long before I was set upon by that bull-headed old knave, your (to me) quandom client; but he prudently kept his thoughts to himself, and I must do my squire the justice to say that he seconded my wild, impracticable adventures with as genuine devotion as ever did squire for knight. He displayed a more cunning ingenuity, in most of my plans, than his master. Not only so, but he stood up in my defense against all incomers; lied remorselessly about my wealth and pretensions, wherever it was, in his opinion, necessary; and engaged in numberless pitched battles, when he thought detraction was over free with my good name. "After some months of profitless changes, and often suffering numberless mortifications and disparagements, I at last returned to what was once my home; sad, broken spirited, almost guilty in feeling, as if I had on my unstrengthened shoulders the guilty weight of a folly entirely my own. "Alas! ah me, 'what shadows we are and what shadows we pursue!' the upshot of my journeyings proved that if I went not on a fool's errand, my mission had been equally bootless, Since I have become the historian of my own adventures, it becomes me, as an impartial chronicler of human events, (to me at least) to strip the motive (so far as I had purpose at all) bare of mere feeling, passion or romantic incident, (however painful it may be for me to do so) and present to you, my listeners, facts, practical predicates for all my vagaries. They may be summed up thus: Two gentleman traveling with their squire, three, in a distant country, on a dark and terrible night, found travelers in distress, and the good fortune to defend them from further evil, and to rescue fair ladies from a very unpleasant predicament (to say the least of it). The night was very black: one of these rescuing travelers had the perilous happiness of a two hours tete-a-tete (as well as such a thing can be or could be, while guiding a chariot over mountain and through ravine, in midnight darkness, and thousand dangers lurking near unseen) with the fairest, loveliest creature on earth (he believed so; believed!) Her pure, sweet voice woke new melody in his heart; inform dis room, prolested, velimently, that himspire was no sound of mind as in a large control of the party and the province of mind. If the party and the province of the party and the par created within him a new life, and startled

THE RIVER is steadily falling, with only thes water in the canal by the mark, equal to feet water. The weather yesterday morning is rather warm, with rains during the previous night, and a very severe thunder storm last evening. The wind for a brief space blew a hur-ricane, and the rain came down in torrents, causing the weather to become quite chilly and lisagreeable.
In the channel hence to Cincinnati, the mail-boat reports only 31/2 feet water at Rising Sun, but fully four feet at all other points. This ena-bles the light fleet to get along without much trouble, proving no serious check to navigation.

The Interchange and Chattanooga, from Cairo, report a few boats aground in the Lower Ohio, with 3½ feet water at Scuffletown, which is about the shoalest bar. The Interchange went from this port to Cairo, and back again, all in less than five days, and to the clerk we are indebted for a memorandum.

Our correspondent from Mound City reports but 3½ feet water at Scuffletown. Our correspondent from Mound City reports but 3½ feet water at Scuffletown.
Our latest advices are by telegraphic dispatch from Capt. Bunce, of the John Gaul, from Evansville. She left this port Wednesday evening with the mail, and full of passengers, and passed Evansville the next evening. Thursday, at 8 o'clock. She passed the John Bell slightly aground at Scuffltown.

The gay Ella, from Cairo, in charge of Brash Dashiell, was due last night. She is advertised to return thither this evening.

The former is owned by six brothers, the Messrs. Desonchet, and by their perseverance alone was this effected. The Moses McLellan, drawing thirty-six inches, came over this afternoon at 2 o'clock, and to Messrs. Priest & Hanmond, whose 2 o'clock, and to Messrs. Priest & Hammond, whose popularity is known "upon land and main," are we indebted for favors and the following report:

"Found 3½ feet water on all the bars except Scuffletown, where there was but three feet. No boats aground. Pringle was lying to above Scuffletown, sounding. She was drawing 4 feet, and will have to lighten to get over."

The Moses rubbed hard at several places, but the commander, Captain Erwin, "knew a thing or two," and got over with but little detention.

The Harmonia, the "People's Line," came around this evening ar 4 o'clock, being light she will get up without any difficulty.

The Antelope has at last been taken on the ways at Paducah.

Reeder's Safety Guard Lock on Steam.—The direct causes of all the late explosions of steamboats on our Western waters are the utter worth-lessness of the safety guards used on boats, and the negligence of engineers. The latter become careless and inattentive from the mere fact that they have a safety guard attached to the boilers, which should give them warning, and by constant habit they are lulled into security, and do not try the guage cocks as often as they should.

Among the most approved if not the best eaforth. Among the most approved, if not the best safe ty guard we know of, is that of Jno. M. Reeder who obtained a patent for it in 1855, after successfully trying it on the steamer Wm. Garvin at this port. It is self-acting, and prevents explosions by means of small pipes, which are opened by the force of the steam, and deluge the fires with water-a perfect lock on steam. FOR CAIRO AND ST. The Board designated Capt. J. Grace, of Pittsburgh, as Inspector of Hulls, and Thomas Snow-den, Esq., of Brownsville, as Inspector of Boilers. These designations were made in pursuance of law to Hon. Howell Cobb, Secretary of the Treasary, who makes the appointment. The following item is taken from a St.

She was detained not more than five minutes at Quarantine. Her mate was sick going down the river, but is now well. Several of the deck hands were sick, but not of yellow fever. There were no deaths. When near Memphis, one night at 8 o'clock, the Lackland encountered a snag, which struck under the larboard guard, forward of the wheelhouse, broke a dozen timbers, gutted her bantry, and pierced through the hurricane deck. Nobody was hurt.

TEMPEST—MAIL PACKET FOR CAIRO AND MEMPHIS.—The Tempest, after a brief rest, comes on ply the mail trade during low water between this and returnished, rendering her one of the lightest and neatest of the summer passenger packets.
